

About the Book

As we enter a truly global epoch we need a historical awareness to match the times. This book offers a new scholarly perspective, a new historical consciousness, and a new subfield of history - global history - that will have a major impact on the way we write history and make policy in the future. The need for a new approach can be seen everywhere: in environmental problems that ignore national boundaries; in nuclear threats that have no territorial limitations; in the rapid increase in multinational economic activity; and in advances in space exploration and communication satellites that link peoples to a degree hitherto unimagined. The contributors to this book offer both a theoretical treatment and a number of examples of what global history is and how it might be written.

Bruce Mazlish is professor of history at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Ralph Buultjens teaches international affairs and Asian religions at the New School for Social Research in New York and at New York University.

About the Editors and Contributors

Richard J. Barnett is a fellow at the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C.

Ralph Buultjens teaches at the New School for Social Research and at New York University. He is the Nehru Professor at the University of Cambridge, England, 1992-1993.

John Cavanagh is a fellow at the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C.

Neva R. Goodwin is director of the Program for the Study of Sustainable Change and Development, Tufts University.

Raymond Grew is professor of history, University of Michigan, and editor of Comparative Studies in Society and History.

John Joyce is professor of music, Tulane University.

Manfred Kossok was professor of history, Karl Marx University in Leipzig. He died on February 27, 1993.

Bruce Mazlish is professor of history, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Louis Menand III is emeritus senior lecturer in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Wolf Schäfer is professor of history, State University of New York, Stony Brook.

Wang Gungwu is vice-chancellor, University of Hong Kong.

Back cover

As we enter a truly global epoch we need a historical awareness to match the times. This book offers a new scholarly perspective, a new historical consciousness, and a new subfield of history - global history - that will have a major impact on the way we write history and make policy in the future. The need for a new approach can be seen everywhere: in environmental problems that ignore national boundaries; in nuclear threats that have no territorial limitations; in the rapid increase in multinational economic activity; and in advances in space exploration and communication satellites that link peoples to a degree hitherto unimagined. The contributors to this book offer both a theoretical treatment and a number of examples of what global history is and how it might be written.

Bruce Mazlish is professor of history at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Ralph Buultjens teaches international affairs and Asian religions at the New School for Social Research in New York and at New York University.

GLOBAL HISTORY

Bruce Mazlish, Carol Gluck, and Raymond Grew
Series Editors

Forthcoming

Global Civilization and Local Cultures
edited by Wolf Schäfer

Global History and Migrations
edited by Wang Gungwu

For order and other information, please write to:

New Global History Press
706 Beacon Street, Newton Center,
Massachusetts 02459, USA