

Acknowledgments

In the process of working on the successive volumes in this series we find ourselves agreeably indebted to many people. The first group are in-house: that is, within Tufts University, and sometimes closer to home, in the Global Development And Environment Institute (G-DAE), which is the sponsor for the series.

Our G-DAE colleague, Jonathan Harris, was a co-editor on two previous Frontiers volumes and has maintained a close association with this one, attending frequent group meetings, giving excellent feedback on essays written by the editors, and aiding us in a variety of ways throughout the process.

A number of Tufts students have assisted in this project, becoming, along the way, valued members of the Frontiers team. Graduate students Rhae Parkes and Mike Strauss did heroic work in researching and assembling articles to consider for summarization. Undergraduates Stacie Bowman and Gabriel Safar were excellent and hard-working library assistants. Copy editing was most ably performed by graduate students Carol Chouchani and John Nordgren. Others who briefly became members of the team, drafting some of the summaries, were Tufts alumnus Martin Hughes and an outside writer, Marc Breslow. Essential backup and support for all of our activities is supplied by the G-DAE office administrator, Dave Plancon.

Early in 1997 we met with a group of scholars in the field whose exceptional insight and experience aided our development of the outlines and the organizational scheme for the book. These included Barry Bluestone, Francois Carre, Peter Doeringer, Robert Forrant, Robert Kuttner, Paula Raymon and Chris Tilly.

Another group of experts gave very helpful responses to a draft of the bibliography. We appreciate their contributions of time and thought, were relieved to receive their general approval, and believe that the final bibliography has benefited from their suggested changes. These reviewers included Eileen Applebaum, Sam Bowles, Robert Buchele, John Dunlop, Nancy Folbre, Clark Kerr, Mehrene Larude, Lisa Lynch, Molly Mead, Susan Ostrander, Michael Piore, and Robert Solow.

We have also been fortunate in receiving institutional support of several kinds. Among the values of being at Tufts University, we wish to single out for especially warm thanks the inter-library loan office at Tisch Library, which has assisted in retrieving an astonishing volume of material for this project. The age of electronic information is a marvelous thing, but without real people in a real library it would be impossible to turn the electrons into the tangible books or journals we often require. We have also benefited from the solid support of our editor, Todd Baldwin, and our publisher, Island Press.

The funders of the Frontiers project, along with those who support the core activities of the Global Development And Environment Institute, provide another, essential type of institutional support. G-DAE's ability to take on and successfully complete a variety of projects in recent years has been undergirded by a series of generous grants from the Ford Foundation and the Fund For the Future. Work on The Changing Nature of Work, in particular, started up under two grants from the Bauman Foundation. We are grateful to Patricia Bauman for her involvement, which both encouraged the writing of graduate theses on related topics (the winners of the Bauman Thesis Awards at Tufts were Sutherland Miller, Rhae Parkes and Saskia Wilhelms), and also gave us a solid financial base at an early stage of the project. The other major funder for this book was the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation. We appreciate greatly the recognition of these foundations (evidenced in their other grant activities, as well) of the timeliness and the practical and theoretical importance of the topic of work, and of the forces affecting the experience and impact of work in people's lives.
